第二节 完形填空 (共 20 小题; 每小题 1.5 分, 共 30 分)

Counting the votes took about five minutes, but it seemed like an hour for me. Captain of the cheerleaders is quite an honor. At least that's what I was ___11___.

As Coach Maguire appeared, all eyes zeroed in ___12___ her.

"Girls," she began. "It's my pleasure to announce that Terry Shaw has been elected Captain of the cheerleading team." A great cheer was heard throughout the gym.

How ___13___ this be? I hadn't ___14___ a practice, or a game, in the three years. Was everyone blind? Didn't they realize that I had worked three years to ___15___ the title?

All the way home, I sobbed. The next morning, I held my uniform close to me. I knew I couldn't ___16___.

___17___ with my teammates.

How very 18 it was to go to that first practice after Terry had been named captain. When I arrived, Terry asked me if I had any ideas on how to improve our routines and talked about how we could make the team better. We? Was she kidding? I just wanted to 19 her and she kept making it harder and harder for me to do that. It wasn't just that she showed interest in me—her interest was warm and 20.

Terry always made sure to 21 me when discussing changes in our routine and eventually I 22 myself and we grew to be very close friends.

At the end of the year, the annual Sports Award Banquet was organized. We decorated the hall, talking about all the good times we had 23 during our last year together. I just wanted to 24 that moment in time.

Later in the evening we arrived and listened as the various trophies were awarded to the most valuable player of each sports team. Of course the team captains all received trophies too. With great 25 I cheered for Terry.

Just as Terry walked off the stage, Coach Maguire stepped up to the microphone again and announced that there was one final trophy to be awarded. The cheerleading “Spirit Award” would now be presented to the girl who showed the most dedicated 26.

When I heard my name announced I imagined I was as 27. Terry was coming toward me. We hugged each other, and Terry whispered, “Nobody 28 this more than you.”

Terry never knew that quitting was all I had on my mind the day she was named captain. She read the 29 in my shallow words of congratulations and embraced me in spite of myself, planting tiny seeds of kindness and respect. From her effort grew a 30 that, to this day, I hold close to my heart.

At Beaver Creek, The Extraordinary Awaits You

Are no two snowflakes alike? The snowflakes we see in the winter are most likely completely unique from one other.

Beaver Creek is a great place to experience the beauty of the snow, with programs for everyone—from children, teens, and women-only lessons to small groups and private-guided experiences.

First Track, from Beaver Creek Reserve, lets you be the first on the mountain, with an adventure that begins at 7:30 a.m. when you are met by ski professionals and taken on a private, guided tour—before the mountain is open to the public. Once you have skied, you are treated to a delicious breakfast at Allie’s Cabin.

If you are looking for a higher level of comfort there is the White Carpet Club, from Beaver Creek Reserve. Located in the heart of Beaver Creek Village, it maximizes your time on the mountain by streamlining your access to it. At the club, there are private lockers and boot dryers, along with preferred self-parking and a slope-side ski waiter. A receptionist can assist with lift tickets, pass purchases, dinner reservations, and activity recommendations.

Of course, there is more to explore during the winter in Beaver Creek as well. There is ice skating, snowshoeing, shopping, and spas—you name it, Beaver Creek has it. It is the perfect place to take advantage of the snow and be in the moment, in the mountains, together.

The extraordinary is a rare combination of one-of-a-kind experiences designed to be shared with service that exceeds expectation. The extraordinary brings you closer to one another and offers a special place to belong together. Belong in The Extraordinary.

I said, “Papi, let me finish school.” None of his other daughters completed more than three grades. “I still can do my chores(家务),” I told him. “Pay for me to finish school.”

He dug his boot into the dry earth of Quanaajuato, the state he never left in his entire life. But he still was the smartest man in our village. He read books about Egypt and knew how to handwrite, unlike my mother, who never had an education.

“Why do you want to return to school?” he said, lowering his eyes to me. “So you can meet a man, marry, and quit? You want me to pay for that?”

“No, Papi,” I said. “I won’ t marry in school and I promise I’ ll graduate.”

The wind whistled through the trees. My father saw a fisherman with a pole bent over the riverbank. I said urgently, “Papi,” and I almost grabbed his thick brown wrist. In the country, my father would stop and talk with any stranger, no matter what he was doing. He would talk about the harvest, the weather, the family, but mostly, he would listen.

He turned, making his way to the fisherman. I followed behind him in my open-toed shoes, carefully picking my steps. I knew I had lost his attention and I searched around me for something to fill the time I would spend waiting. But there was nothing and nobody.

“Buenos dias,” my father said to the fisherman.

I took my seat ten feet from them. The two men stared across the lake and talked. Their voices droned on and were blended with the wind. I daydreamed.

“Marta, come here,” my father called to me.

I lifted myself up and walked very slowly toward them without lifting my feet off the ground.

“Marta,” my father said, “I have asked Don Toms what he thinks about your promise.”

I stared at this fisherman, this stranger, and then back at my father with wide eyes.

“I told him about your promise to stay single, and he told me—let her go.”

The fisherman looked down at his worn shoes. “If you want it,” he said to the earth beneath his feet.

Later, I became Father’ s only daughter to complete high school education, and the only one to leave his house unmarried.

Every year migratory(迁徙的) bats travel from Mexico to Bracken Cave, where they spend the summer consuming insects that would otherwise hungrily eat common food crops. But the bats have been showing up far earlier than they did two decades ago.

In a study, scientists at Rothamsted Research, an agricultural laboratory in England, used radar data from 160 U.S. weather stations to analyze activity in the Texas bat colony from 1995 through 2017. They discovered the creatures were leaving their winter quarters in Mexico earlier and reproducing sooner. They were also astonished to find increasing numbers of bats overwintering(过冬) at Bracken Cave instead of heading back to their cold weather quarters in Mexico. Overwintering is a sign that warmer temperatures change the bats' annual rhythms, Rothamsted biologist Phillip Stepanian says.

A separate study of migratory bats in Indiana, published last year, found that temperature variations affected arrival and departure times—likewise hinting at the potential influence of climate change. Joy O' Keefe, a biology professor at Indiana State University and co-author of that study, says early arrival at their summer habitats(栖息地) could expose these bats to cold snaps(寒流), and they could freeze to death.

Joy O' Keefe and her colleagues also found that changing bat migration times can also clash with rainfall patterns. Many insects that bats eat breed in seasonal lakes and puddles. If the bats arrive too early to benefit from summer rainfall and the resulting abundance of insects, they may struggle to feed their pups(幼崽) or skip reproduction altogether, O' Keefe says. She fears this shift could cause Midwestern bats to decrease toward extinction, which would be bad news for humans. "Declines in bat populations could have severe effects for crop success," she says, adding that bats also "control significant disease vectors, such as mosquitoes."

However, scientists are not certain that climate change alone is causing the Bracken Cave bat colony to migrate earlier. They have found a direct link between seasonal temperatures and bird migration, but bats are also influenced by factors such as changes in wind speed and direction. And there are other complications. "Bats are mysterious little animals that move mostly at night and are difficult to observe and track," Stepanian says. "We have this conceptual picture of what might be happening, but really tying it to the cause is the next step."

38. Scientists at Rothamsted Research found that _____.

- A. bats prefer colder weather
- B. bats delay their reproduction
- C. warming affects bat migration
- D. radar can be used to observe bats

39. Joy O' Keefe discovered that _____.

- A. bats are used to living in rainfall seasons
- B. bats' earlier migration might harm farming
- C. insects' reproduction helps to spread disease
- D. insects shortage makes bats reproduce earlier

40. What does the last paragraph want to tell us?

- A. Wind speed and direction affect bats.
- B. It is difficult to observe and track bats.

- C. Climate change makes bats migrate earlier.
- D. Further research on the cause is necessary.

41. What is the best title for the passage?

- A. Bats' habitats
- B. Endangered bats
- C. Bats' schedule
- D. Bats, our good friends

D

On March 18, 2018, Elaine Herzberg was crossing a road in Tempe, Arizona, when a Volvo SUV hit and killed her. Although she was one of thousands of U.S. pedestrians killed by vehicles every year, one distinctive aspect set her death apart: Nobody was driving that Volvo. A computer was.

Just a couple of months later, a survey by AAA (American Automobile Association) revealed that 73 percent of Americans were too scared to zip around in a totally autonomous ride—a 10 percent increase from a similar poll taken before Herzberg's death. Actually, self-driving cars are already cruising our streets, their spinning lasers and other sensors scanning the world around them. But what makes some of us still so wary of these robotic chauffeurs, and how can they earn our trust?

To understand these questions, it first helps to consider what psychologists call the theory of mind. Put simply, it's the recognition that other people have brains in their heads that are busy thinking, just like ours (usually) are. The theory comes in handy on the road. Before we venture into a crosswalk, we might first make eye contact with a driver and then think, He sees me, so I'm safe, or He doesn't, so I'm not. It's a technique we likely use more than we realize, both behind the wheel and on our feet. But you can't make eye contact with an algorithm(计算程序). When a car is in self-driving mode, the computer's in charge. "We're going to have to learn a theory of the machine mind," says Azim Shariff, a professor of psychology at the University of British Columbia. What that means in practice is that self-driving cars will need to provide clear signals—and not just turn signals—to let the public know what that machine mind is planning.

However, that doesn't mean we want it to mimic exactly how humans think and act while driving. In fact, the promise of traveling by autonomous car is that silicon brains won't do dumb things such as text and drive, or drink and drive, or rocket down the highway while upset after a breakup. (Cars don't date.) "I believe that they have the potential to be safer than regular cars," says Marjory S. Blumenthal, a senior policy analyst at the RAND Corporation. But she says there's not enough good data yet to know for sure.

One practical way to create a reputation for safety is to start slow. The University of Michigan's pair of self-driving shuttles go just 12 miles per hour. Huei Peng, a professor of mechanical engineering, says the research team behind the project is building trust by not asking too much: The predetermined route is just about a mile long, so they're not exactly speeding down a highway in the snow. "We're trying to push the envelope but in a very careful way," Peng says.

Indeed, the public isn't homogeneous, says Raj Rajkumar, who directs the Metro21. He notices three categories of potential users: tech skeptics, early adopters, and people who are stressed by driving. The early adopters will buy in first, followed by the folks who just dislike driving, and then finally the skeptics, he argues. "So it's a long process." Trust grows like a self-driving shuttle drives: slowly.

42. What did the survey by AAA show?
- A. The wide use of self-driving cars.
  - B. The growing doubts on self-driving cars.
  - C. The urgent need for laws on self-driving cars.
  - D. The rapid rise of deaths caused by self-driving cars.
43. The theory of mind is mentioned to show _____.
- A. human mind makes driving easier
  - B. communication takes away drivers' attention
  - C. communicative skills can be improved by practice
  - D. self-driving cars are not as safe for their machine mind
44. Paragraph 4 wants to tell us that self-driving cars _____.
- A. will replace regular cars
  - B. couldn't act like humans
  - C. could be safer than regular cars
  - D. should learn to think like humans
45. What is the author's attitude towards the future development of self-driving cars?
- A. Cautious but optimistic.
  - B. Puzzled but hopeful.
  - C. Concerned but pessimistic.
  - D. Skeptical but interested.

第二节（共 5 小题；每小题 2 分，共 10 分）

根据短文内容，从短文后的七个选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Develop Note-Taking Skills

Speech students are often amazed at how easily their teacher can pick out a speaker's main points, evidence, and techniques. Of course, the teacher knows what to listen for and has had plenty of practice. But the next time you get an opportunity, watch your teacher during a speech. Chances are she or he will be listening with pen and paper. 46

Unfortunately, many people don't take notes effectively. Some try to write down everything a speaker says. They view note taking as a race, pitting their handwriting agility(敏捷) against the speaker's rate of speech. 47 But soon the speaker is winning the race. The speaker pulls so far ahead that the note taker can never catch up. Finally, the note taker admits defeat and spends the rest of the speech grumbling in frustration.

48 They arrive armed with pen, notebook, and the best of intentions. They know they can't write down everything, so they settle comfortably in their seats and wait for the speaker to say something that grabs their attention. Every once in a while the speaker rewards them with a joke, a dramatic story, or a startling fact. Then the note taker seizes pen, jots down a few words, and leans back dreamily to await the next fascinating tidbit(趣闻). By the end of the lecture the note taker has a set of tidbits—and little or no record of the speaker's important ideas.

As these examples illustrate, they don't know what to listen for, and they don't know how to record what they do listen for. 49 But once you know what to listen for, you still need a sound method of note taking.

Although there are a number of systems, most students find the key-word outline best for listening to speeches. As its name suggests, this method briefly notes a speaker's main points and supporting evidence in rough outline form. By separating main points from sub-points and evidence, the outline format shows the relationships among the speaker's ideas. 50 But with a little effort you will become a better note taker.

- A. Perfecting this taking requires practice.
- B. Some people go to the opposite extreme.
- C. As the speaker starts to talk, the note taker starts to write.
- D. Taking effective notes usually helps you receive higher grades.
- E. Most inefficient note takers suffer from one or both of two problems.
- F. When note taking is done properly, it is sure to keep track of a speaker's ideas.

四、One possible version:

It was a bright sunny day, last Saturday. After getting up, I started to jog in the park near my home. I was so happy breathing the fresh air in the warm sunshine. When I came near the lake, I saw a kid fishing with his dad.

At first I didn't notice the sign saying "No Fishing" because it's too small to spot. But having known that fishing is forbidden here, I went up to stop them. They hadn't seen the sign either until I showed them. The dad felt so sorry about what they had done and packed up all the gears immediately. Then we waved goodbye to each other.

When I was about to continue my jogging, a worry struck me. What if other people didn't notice the small sign? I went to the Park Service to suggest making the sign larger and more obvious. The officer was so glad to take my advice and I felt very excited.

What a good Saturday!
