Grandpa's Light Show

Cameron and Grandpa were preparing for Cameron's parents to arrive for the weekend. First, they opened all the windows so the cabin would smell like the fresh ocean air. Grandpa did three loads of laundry, and Cameron helped him hang the sheets to dry on the clothesline. Then, they picked two buckets of blueberries. "Enough to turn our fingers and our tongues blue!" said Grandpa.

It was just before dinnertime when Cameron's parents arrived. They were exhausted from their long drive and ready to relax.

"Wait until you see what we have planned for dinner," said Cameron, hugging his parents. He gave them only a few minutes to change their clothes and unpack before he led them down the path to the beach. Grandpa had already started a small fire in the fire pit.

"I had no idea you two were such good fishermen and cooks!" said Mom when she sampled the fish and the roasted corn. "This tastes wonderful! It reminds me of summers here when I was a girl," she said, smiling and patting Grandpa on the knee.

"It gets even better, I hear," said Dad. "When's dessert?"

Mom, Dad, Grandpa, and Cameron were eating their blueberry sundaes on the porch (门廊) when streaks of green, yellow, and purple shot across the sky.

"Did you see that?" shouted Cameron jumping out of his chair. "What do you think that was? It looked like it could have been a spaceship or something!"

Mom began to laugh. "That," she said, "was the perfect ending to a perfect day."

"Those are the northern lights, Cameron," said Grandpa. "I'm so glad you got a chance to see them. Spring and fall are usually a much better time than summer to see them in Maine."

"Look, there they go again," said Dad, pointing to a flickering of pink and pale green light over the water.

"But what are they?" asked Cameron.

"I guess you could call them a colored light show in the night sky," said Grandpa. "You can only see them in the parts of the world that have high latitudes(纬度), which means the areas are closer to the poles. Tonight is a perfect night to see the northern lights because it is clear and moonless."

Cameron sat back down in his chair and picked up his bowl of ice cream. "Grandpa, I think I just might have to move to Maine. There is definitely too much to see here on just one vacation!"

decided what could and could not be considered art. A brave group of painters, called the Impressionists, challenged these ideas and changed art forever.

In the middle of the 1800s, France was considered the most important place in the world for art. One reason for that was the Academy, a government organization with a strict set of rules about art. To be accepted by the Academy, an artist had to be very talented. Artists also had to paint exactly the way the Academy wanted them to. How could an artist be creative if he or she was told what to create?

Each year, the Academy had an exhibition of the art they had decided was the best. In 1864, a group of artists who did not get into the show became frustrated. They felt that their paintings were not bad; the paintings were just different. After complaining to the government, these artists were given their own show. It was called the Salon des Refuses, which means the exhibition of rejects.

The Academy thought all art should look realistic. The Impressionists wanted to explore other ideas. They were more interested in trying to show movement and the bright colors of daylight. For example, if you move your hand quickly in front of your face, it looks blurry(模糊的). To the Impressionists, it was more real to show these blurry images than it was to paint a scene frozen like a photograph. It was also more interesting to show all of the different colors that occur when light hits an object like water.

By 1874, many different artists were painting in this new style, including Claude Monet. One of his paintings was titled Impression: Sunrise. A critic named Louis Leroy did not like these new artists. He thought their paintings looked unfinished. He used Monet's title to make fun of these painters by calling them "impressionists," meaning that they did not make real paintings, just sketches. The critics who liked these artists thought the word was just right. They began to use it in a positive way.

Some of the other Impressionists were Pierre-Auguste Renoir, Alfred Sisley, Edgar Degas, and Mary Cassatt. They thought it was more important to paint how they saw things, instead of just what they saw. Other artists around the world felt that they could have this freedom as well. Because of the Impressionists, the art world was never the same.

48. We can know from the passage that _____.

- A. the Academy decided what art was
- B. the Academy changed the old ideas
- C. the Academy artists must be talented
- D. the Academy artists could be creative.

49. The painting Impression: Sunrise belongs to _____.

- A. Louis Leroy
- B. Mary Cassatt
- C. Claude Monet
- D. Alfred Sisley

50. What is the main idea of paragraph 4?

- A. According to the Academy, all art should look realistic.
- B. The impressionists wanted to explore light and movement.
- C. The impressionists were interested in showing all colors of light.
- D. The impressionists thought painting like photograph uninteresting.

51. We learn from the passage that _____.

- A. The government only supported the Academy.
- B. The "Impressionists" was called by critics for fun.
- C. The paintings of the Impressionists look unfinished.
- D. The paintings of the Academy are about what people saw.

WHEN Arthur Conan Doyle created Sherlock Holmes in 1886, he would not have predicted his hero's appearance on the stamps of Nicaragua, or his role inspiring themed flash mobs(民众) in St Petersburg. Nor indeed would he have foreseen Holmes' eventual appearance in the Guinness Book of Records. But thanks in part to Holmes's international attraction, "the most portrayed character in film" is a British detective rather than a spy.

Holmes on screen shapes him in a wealth of ways. Played in the early years by the masculine(男子气概的) likes, he has been reinterpreted(重新解释) in the past five as a sexy and active action-hero and a loveable sociopath. Considering such change, another adaptation might seem like too much of a good thing.

Yet Holmes has once again been successfully reborn, this time in "Mr. Holmes", Bill Condon's latest film. He is now a recluse(隐士) living in Sussex with his housekeeper and her son Roger, and his bees. The narrative is a patchwork of three different timelines, allowing a direct comparison between the old and the more original Holmes that tells the detective's ageing. A man of genius is reduced to chasing the rest intelligence, and fighting against the degeneration(退化) of his abilities as much as the facts of his last case.

What sets this interpretation apart from others is that the focus shifts from the external to the internal, from the adventures to the character himself. Unlike the source material, this is not the usual pastiche of Holmes solving the unsolvable. The true story is the one the viewers watch unfold. There is an amusing film-within-a-film moment using Nicholas Rowe as "The Young Sherlock" and it gives the director the opportunity to explore the role from new angles. Historically, Holmes's attraction has been his cool way to problem and high intelligence which have led audiences to admire and amazed at his superhuman feature. In "Mr. Holmes" they are invited to go into his human side and an ailing genius' lonely decline.

After an age of fixed portraits, the refreshing view of "Mr. Holmes" successfully gives a literary god mortal. In the process, it has ended up becoming as thrilling off-screen as it is on-screen.

52. What kind of person is Holmes in the new film?

- A. A sexy and active action-hero. B. A loveable sociopath.
C. A recluse living with his bees. D. A superhuman with high intelligence.

53. What makes the new film different from the others?

- A. It uses new angles to solve cases.
B. It tells more about Holmes' adventures.
C. It focuses on Holmes' superman features.
D. It pays more attention to Holmes' human side.

54. What does the author think of the film "Mr. Holmes"?

- A. Brilliant. B. Acceptable. C. Boring. D. Awful.

55. The passage is probably taken from _____.

- A. a travel guide B. a scientific report C. a film review D. a fashion magazine

I'm also interested in photography because it allows me to record the beautiful moments in my life. Through my hobbies, I've made many friends. In fact, I like meeting new people and enjoy talking with them. For my English learning, I am a fanatic. Reading English books is my favorite every day. And I also love chatting with friends in English due to my outgoing personality. In my experience, these two things above are the most beneficial ways to learning English well. I got a lot of prizes in English competitions in my junior high school. For example, I was awarded the first prize in English Speaking Contest. And I always win the top five in the class every test.

Thinking that you will give us many lectures on English speaking countries and their cultures, I am looking forward to taking your class. I am also sure I will be very active to join in your class activities and make friends with you.
